But a lucid explanation of the inner arrangement of a complicated machine or apparatus, an easy demonstration of a difficult point, and the art of expressing in clear language the knowledge gained, cannot be obtained by the most assiduous physical labor. They require a different practice: a careful training both in understanding the point of the question, and in giving a correct, complete and concise answer. As it will soon be impossible for an engineer to fill any desirable position without passing a severe test, the need of a thorough drill in the mental work is self-evident.
