The chemists took ordinary Sillpplite wood pulp, well bleached, and Washed it until it appeared like sirup, clear but thick. This sirup is readily made into tubes of jelly with very thin walls. The tubes are dried, and then are ready for use as sausage casings whenever needed. The cellulose casings have been found to be stout, colorless, and so close to the appearance of the ancient device that butchers have not suspected the substitution. one listened to, and flowers that no one cared to look at or smell, and food of which no one could eat the hundredth part, when there were so many starving or sick people in the world. Such people were of the same metal--though less white-hot--as Kate Barnard, of Oklahoma, who quivers like a flame when she says on public platforms: I swear to God Ill never wear a diamond so long as there is a hungry child in the world! Other readers there were, imbued with the desire to palliate and possessing a certain amount of false political economy; and these said it was beneficial to have all that money in circulation--it helped florists and musicians and caterers. These were the sort of people who would not change their WI1W11y, 8lidwho took a mild kind of pleasure in explaining the ways of others whom they would never dream of imitating. There were still other Americans, however, iiot of the spectator sort--young, eager, imitative people full of democratic belief...
